Memorial of Sts. Joachim and Ann, Parents of the Blessed Virgin Mary

Homily of Bishop Barres

St. Agnes Cathedral

July 26, 2023

Today we celebrate the Memorial of Sts. Joachim and Ann, the Parents of the Blessed Virgin Mary and the Grandparents of Our Lord.

As we know, Pope Francis has instituted a World Day for Grandparents and the Elderly and has connected this celebration with the great figures of Sts. Joachim and St. Ann. We celebrated this World Day for Grandparents and the Elderly just this past Sunday, July 23rd.

Pope Francis points to the example of Sts. Joachim and Ann in Salvation history: “Saints Joachim and Ann were part of a long chain of people who had transmitted their faith and love for God, expressed in the warmth and love of family life, down to Mary, who received the son of God in her womb and who gave him to the world, to us. How precious is the family as the privileged place for transmitting the faith!”

Here are some of Pope Francis’ beautiful insights from his homily last Sunday about the role of grandparents and the elderly in Catholic formation and evangelization. He writes:

Here I think of our grandparents: how beautiful are these thriving trees, in whose “branches” children and grandchildren build their own “nests”, learning the warmth of home and experiencing the tenderness of an embrace. This is about growing together: the verdant tree and the little ones who need a nest, grandparents with their children and grandchildren, the elderly with the youngest. Brothers and sisters, how much we need a new bond between young and old, so that the sap of those who have a long experience of life behind them will nourish the shoots of hope of those who are growing. In this fruitful exchange we can learn the beauty of life, build a fraternal society, and in the Church be enabled to encounter one another and dialogue between tradition and the newness of the Spirit.
So many of us have been inspired by the Catholic faith and virtue of our grandparents and other elderly members of our families. So often our grandparents, in their wisdom and life experience, have modelled for us the Catholic faith and have gently taught us and catechized us about our Catholic faith.

We are called to give gentle attention and reverence to our grandparents and the elderly in our families. We are called to be present to them. We are called to be Simon of Cyrenes helping them to carry the crosses of old age as they, in turn, help to give us wisdom and perspective as we carry our crosses.

I think of the big-hearted young Catholic on a University campus strolling between classes and checking in by cell phone on their grandmother or grandfather. These small deeds of charity light up a grandparent’s life and expand the heart and spirit of family sacrifice of the young person making the call.

Many of us have lost our grandparents. Many of us have never met our grandparents. Still, we pray for their souls and give thanks for their legacy in our families and in our lives at Mass.

Grandparents also put us in touch with our family stories, our family history and our genealogies.

As so many of us know, the study of family genealogy can be a powerfully spiritual experience that connects us with the cosmic power of the Paschal Mystery of the Catholic Mass.

There is something about tracing the generations back and getting some understanding of who our ancestors were and where they came from that is so powerful.

Every step they took in their lives is mysteriously connected to every step we take in life. Our grandparents and elderly members of our extended family so often open us to these beautiful windows of God’s grace. What a powerful dimension of our understanding of the Catholic doctrine of the Communion of Saints.

As we look at page after page of genealogical charts, it is amazing to realize that every person on the chart had to meet providentially their specific spouse for us to ever come into existence. It is so powerful to trace the lines and twists and turns of providence in our families.
Our study of family genealogy inevitably leads us to the Catholic Mass and our belief in prayer for the souls of the dead. All of us have memories and experiences of family reunions and the Catholic Mass reminds us that these reunions are more extensive and deeper than the limited family reunions we experience in this life. The anticipation of meeting the people who went before us genealogically but also in regard to our Catholic faith is part of our burning desire for heaven and Eternal Life.

Finally, in a Catholic spirit, Pope Francis calls us to a unity, harmony and charity that is intergenerational both in our families and in the world. He writes:

Brothers and sisters, God’s word calls us not to separate ourselves, close in on ourselves or think we can do it alone, but to grow together. Let us listen to each other, talk together and support one another. Let us not forget our grandparents or the elderly, for so often we have been lifted up, gotten back on track, felt loved and been healed within, all by a caress of theirs. They have made sacrifices for us, and we cannot let them drop down the list of our priorities. Let us grow together, let us go forward together. May the Lord bless our journey!

We ask the intercession of Sts. Joachim and Ann for the evangelizing witness of grandparents and the elderly in the world.

We give thanks for the way they so generously share the Holy Spirit’s gift of wisdom.
Jesus uses parables to teach us about the kingdom of God. He recounts simple stories that touch the hearts of his listeners. Such language, full of imagery, resembles the language that grandparents often use with their grandchildren, perhaps while holding them on their laps. In this way they pass on a wisdom important for life. Thinking of our grandparents and the elderly, whose roots young people need in order to grow into adulthood, I would like to reread the three stories contained in today’s Gospel, beginning with an aspect they have in common: growing together.

In the first parable, the wheat and the weeds grow together, in the same field (cf. Mt 13:24-30). This image helps us to see things realistically: in human history, as in each of our lives, there is a mixture of light and shadows, love and selfishness. Good and evil are even intertwined to the point of seeming inseparable. This realistic approach helps us to view history without ideologies, without sterile optimism or poisonous pessimism. Christians, motivated by the hope of God, are not pessimists; nor do they naively live in a fairy tale, pretending not to see evil and saying that “all is well”. No, Christians are realists: they know that there are wheat and weeds in the world. Looking at their own lives, they recognize that evil does not only come from “outside”, that it is not always the fault of others, that there is no need to “invent” enemies to fight against in order to avoid looking within themselves. They realize that evil comes from within, in the inner struggle that we all experience.

Yet, the parable poses a question: When we see “wheat” and “weeds” living side by side in the world, what should we do? How should we react? In the narrative, the servants would like immediately to pull up the weeds (cf. v. 28). This attitude comes from good intentions, but is impulsive and even aggressive. They delude themselves into thinking that they can uproot evil by their own efforts in order to make things pure. Indeed, we frequently see the temptation of seeking to bring about a “pure society” or a “pure Church”, whereas in working to reach this purity, we risk being impatient, intransigent, even violent toward those who have fallen into error. In this way, together with the weeds we pull up the good wheat and block people from moving forward, from growing and changing. Let us listen instead to what Jesus says: “Let both of them grow together until the harvest” (Mt 13:30). How beautiful is this vision of God, his way of teaching us about mercy. This invites us to be patient with others, and – in our families, in the Church and in society – to welcome weakness, delay and limitations, not in order to let ourselves grow accustomed to them or excuse them, but to learn to act with respect, caring for the good wheat gently and patiently. We must also remember that the purification of the heart and the definitive victory over evil are essentially God’s work. And we, overcoming the temptation to divide the wheat from the weeds, are called to understand the best ways and times for action.

Here I think of our grandparents and the elderly, who have already travelled far along life’s journey. If they look back, they see so many beautiful things they have succeeded in doing. Yet they also see defeats, mistakes, things that – as they say – “if I went back I would not do again”. Yet today the Lord offers us a gentle word that invites us to accept the mystery of life with serenity and patience, to leave judgment to him, and not to live regretful and remorseful lives. It is as if Jesus wanted to say to us: “Look at the good wheat that has sprouted along the path of your life and let it keep growing, entrusting everything to me, for I always forgive: in the end, the good will be stronger than the evil”. Old age is indeed a blessed time, for it is the season to be reconciled, a time for looking tenderly at the light that has shone despite the shadows, confident in the hope that the good wheat sown by God will prevail over the weeds with which the devil has wanted to plague our hearts.

Let us now turn to the second parable. Jesus tells us that the kingdom of heaven is the work of God acting silently in the course of history, to the point of seeming small and invisible, like a tiny mustard seed. Yet, when this seed grows, “it is the greatest of shrubs and becomes a tree, so that the birds of the air come and make nests in its branches” (Mt 13:32). Brothers and sisters, our lives are like this too, for we come into the world so small; we become adults, then grow old. At the beginning we are like a small seed; then we are nourished by hopes, and our plans and dreams come to fruition, the most beautiful of which become like the tree that does not live for itself but gives shade to all who desire it and offers space to those who wish to build a nest there. Thus those who grow together in this parable are ultimately the mature tree and the little birds.

Here I think of our grandparents: how beautiful are these thriving trees, in whose “branches” children and grandchildren build their own “nests”, learning the warmth of home and experiencing the tenderness of an embrace. This is about growing together: the verdant tree and the little ones who need a nest, grandparents with their children and grandchildren, the elderly with the youngest. Brothers and sisters, how much we need a new bond between young and old, so that the sap of those who have a long experience of life behind them will nourish the shoots of hope of those who are growing. In this fruitful exchange we can learn the beauty of life, build a fraternal society, and in the Church be enabled to encounter one another and dialogue between tradition and the newness of the Spirit.

Finally the third parable, where the yeast and the flour grow together (cf. Mt 13:33). This mixing makes the whole dough rise. Jesus uses the verb “to mix”. This reminds us of the “art” or “mystique” of “living together, of mingling and encounter, of embracing and supporting one another... To go out of ourselves and to join others” (Evangelii Gaudium, 87). This is the way to overcome individualism and selfishness, and to build a more human and more fraternal world. Indeed, today the word of God calls us to be vigilant so that we do not marginalize the elderly in our families or lives. Let us be careful, so that our crowded cities do not become “centres of loneliness”; that politics, called to provide for the needs of the most fragile, never forgets the elderly nor allows the market to banish them as “unprofitable waste”. May we not chase after the utopias of efficiency and performance at full-speed, lest we become incapable of slowing down to accompany those who struggle to keep up. Please, let us mingle and grow together.
Brothers and sisters, God’s word calls us not to separate ourselves, close in on ourselves or think we can do it alone, but to grow together. Let us listen to each other, talk together and support one another. Let us not forget our grandparents or the elderly, for so often we have been lifted up, gotten back on track, felt loved and been healed within, all by a caress of theirs. They have made sacrifices for us, and we cannot let them drop down the list of our priorities. Let us grow together, let us go forward together. May the Lord bless our journey!
